OVERVIEW

Business and accounting skills are crucial in every type of organization and industry. Whether an organization is public or private, government or non-profit, skilled professionals who can plan, manage, market, and monitor operations are essential. Within LCC's business and accounting programs, you can choose from associate degree programs that prepare you to go to work in business and entry-level accounting positions, or transfer to a bachelor's program. Transfer pathways for both business and accounting are available through the Lower Columbia Regional University Center, located on the LCC campus.
